3. Other items of interest.

a. Distinguished Intelligence Medal to General Walters. On 17 May 1973 the Director presented the DIM to General Walters. The citation reads:

"in recognition of his outstanding performance of his moral and legal responsibilities as the Deputy Director of Central Intelligence. General Walters intensively learned the details of the Agency's mission, organizational structure and activities. His exceptional talents in human relations made him a highly effective representative of the organization in dealings with foreign intelligence officials and other members of the United States Government. Behind his outward appearance of informality and conviviality, he displayed the highest qualities of moral integrity and rigid adherence to his constitutional responsibilities, despite a number of severe pressures to lead him to a contrary position. General Walters' actions made a major contribution to the Central Intelligence Agency and reflect great credit on him, the United States Army, and the Federal service."
